
ASJMC Individual Membership

The Association of Schools of Journalism and Mass Communication is a non-profit association of administrators from journalism and mass communication programs.

Composed of more than 200 deans, directors and chairs from across the country, ASJMC provides forums, workshops and information on the many issues and challenges facing administrators in journalism and mass communication programs such as fund raising, incorporating diversity in JMC units, curriculum revision and creating alliances with the industry.

Founded in 1917, ASJMC holds sessions during the annual convention of the Association for Education in Journalism and Mass Communication each August, and a special workshop on breaking administrative issues each year during the ASJMC meeting.

Individual Membership in ASJMC is designed for other administrators from member programs who are interested in enhancing their skills as an administrator, and staying abreast of the issues facing journalism and mass communication education today.

Individual members may serve on and chair appointed committees, and participate in all programs and discussions. Individual members of ASJMC do not have voting rights, and may not seek elected offices. Only administrators, or former administrators, from ASJMC-member programs are eligible for individual membership.

Individual members receive all ASJMC mailings, newsletters and publications including its annual faculty/administrator demographic and salary survey report, and are eligible for all ASJMC programs and workshops.

Individual membership in ASJMC provides:

- Opportunities to participate in workshops that will enhance your administrative skills
- A subscription to ASJMC Insights, a journal devoted to administrative issues facing journalism and mass communication leaders
- A copy of the annual faculty/administrator salary and demographic survey
- Opportunities to network with other administrators from across the United States
